FYI

CVA Elections Coming Up

There are only a few more months left in our calendar year and we will need new officers. If you are interested in a position on let me know. President, VP, Secretary and Board member seats will be coming vacant. If you see want to have an active part in changing the organization this is your opportunity. The time commitment is only one meeting a month. It is a great way to get plugged into what is really happening with the club and allows you to voice your opinions about how you thing the club should change.

3D Shoot

CVA is having the monthly 3D shoot on June 25th and 26th. Don wants everyone there at 7:00 a.m. with all your hunting gear. It is time to find out if you have problems while shooting with a full pack or if your new high tech camo clothes will be hitting your string when you shoot. You need to figure these things out before you are in front of Buckzilla.

Adopt a Target

We are still looking for a few folks to adopt the last few targets. When you adopt a target you are taking ownership of the upkeep around the target, which primarily means pulling weeds and cutting any overgrowth that would block a shooter. If you are interested in adopting a target please look on page 8 for those lonely targets and contact Keith Murphy about adopting a target.

Range Beatification days

Are the first Saturday of even months. August 6th is the next day. Please come out and help keep the range beautiful. Mark your calendars

Beware of Rattle Snakes

As the warmer weather comes out so do the rattle snakes. Be aware of rattle snakes.

From the Prez.

To all CVA members:

I want to thank everyone who came out to help on the last beautification day. For those of you that were not there you missed out on some good polish dog and chips. We will be serving up hot dogs again at the next beautification day. If you want to bring some additional items to add to lunch.

We will be looking for folks to help with replacing the bales on the JOAD range. We will need help with removing the old bales. Planting posts in concrete to hold up the bales and putting the bales back up.

We will send out emails before we start to remind everyone.

From the Editor

To All,

Last month we sent out the Quiver electronically and posted it to the web site. This is in addition to the snail mail version. Let me know how you like it. My e-mail is pentico@aol.com.

It was a little more difficult than we had expected, but it always takes longer the first time. Over the next couple months we are planning to reformat the Quiver so that it will be a little more friendly to electronic formats, so expect some changes to the look and feel of this publication.

CVA JOAD

News

Hi all,

We had one brave shooter this month...Meade Ridgley. He got his Bowman pin with points to spare. It was a clear and picture-perfect day for shooting. Good job Meade! Next week JOAD will be closed for the tournament in Long Beach. I'm sure many will earn their pins there as well.

If anyone who is interested in continuing their coaching certifications please let me know and I can hook you up with Van Webster and he can take you to the next level.

On another note: Haven't heard any changes for the 5th Annual JOAD BBQ scheduled for July 2nd so I guess all is a go. Chef Mike keeps me in the loop as to the menu and I'm giving you the inside scoop, you don't want to miss this one!

No news yet on when the JOAD facility is going to be changing out the bales and having our annual work party to clean up the range, but we'll keep you informed. That's about it for now. See you out there Saturday.

Coach Mike

May Club Shoot

From the office of the Tournament Chairman,
John B. Downey

Well ... Clark is back again at the top this month with a 554 score (524 scratch – nice shooting!). He was followed by Mike “Senior Statesman” Keena (who picked up his first handicap this month) with a 543. Brent Richter (541, 412) and Chuck Thurber (513, 341) finish off the top four. Missing from the top was Keith Murphy who decided to take some pointers from Garry Magness in the use of the Long Bow. Garry came in on top with a 253 to Keith’s 234 (wonder what Garry charged Keith for the education?).

Club Trophy (Best Five Handicapped Scores)

Clark is still the favorite (for now) to win the Club Championship Trophy (Belt Buckle) with a 554.4 average. Keith is right behind with a 534.4, and the Richter Seismic Duo (Brent 480.6, Barbara 478.4) are in 3rd and 4th. Coming is for 5th was Chuck Thurber, who don't forget, snuck in one year at the very end to win it all. Still plenty of time before this one gets decided.

Archery, Romance and Elite Culture in England and Wales, c.1780-1840

MARTIN JOHNES, St Martin's College, Lancaster

In May 1792, members of the upper class met on Blackheath common to take part in the fourth meeting of the archery societies of England. Dressed in green, the archers marched to their shooting positions to the sound of a beating drum and afterwards retired with the ladies to dine in their societies' marquees. A large crowd watched the glamorous spectacle of their social betters at play. Archery was the latest fashion for the social elite, for whom it combined sociability and status in a romantic atmosphere that boasted picturesque and medieval overtones. As one contemporary writer noted, 'English Archery, once the terror of foreign enemies, [was] now changed into a pleasing, elegant and healthful amusement.'

In the middle of the eighteenth century archery had been little more than a scattered and peripheral pastime. The 'reviver of archery' was Sir Ashton Lever, an antiquarian and collector famous for his aviary and museum. In 1777, Lever was involved in the formation of the Middleton Archers, and then, in 1781, he formed the Toxophilite Society, which combined shooting with considerable drinking and eating. The first entry in its accounts was £21 17s for brandy, rum, wine and gin, and a brass corkscrew.

The mix of sport and conviviality appealed to an aristocracy that had considerable time and money on its hands. Nonetheless, it took royal patronage to turn the novelty of archery into 'the prevailing amusement' and to ensure that the membership of the Toxophilites and 'several other societies, formed a brilliant assemblage of the nobility and gentry of the land'. In 1787, George, Prince of Wales, ever attracted by the unusual and the glamorous, agreed to become patron of the Toxophilites. In 1784, the society had had just 24 members; by 1791 the now Royal Toxophilites had a membership of 168.

The prize shoots themselves were as festive and ceremonial as they were competitive. The Royal British Bowmen toured around the country houses of its members, complete with its own marquee and servants. Members 'marched two and two to the shooting ground, the music playing a new march composed for the occasion, and colours flying. On their arrival at the ground, a royal salute of 21 guns was fired.' Many societies sounded bugles when an arrow struck the target's gold centre and presented prizes to the champions that included laurel leaves, mediaeval titles and silver bugles, arrows and medals.

Prize shoots were followed by dinners and balls, and often poetry and singing too. The wealthiest societies built their own lodges to host the celebrations, while the smaller societies utilized marquees or local taverns. Such spectacles naturally drew crowds of onlookers when held in public places. Given the haphazard talents of the archers, and perhaps the alcohol consumed, this was not always safe. At a 1791 meeting of the Kendal Archers, which attracted a large and encroaching crowd, a tanner and two tailors were hit by arrows.

The elite (both titled and untitled) of Britain was narrowly constructed and closely related by bonds of marriage and blood. It is not surprising then that the Royal British Bowmen (founded in 1787) had its origins in the marriage of Sir Richard Brooke, fifth baronet of Norton Priory, Cheshire, and Mary, the daughter of Sir Robert Cunliffe of Acton Park, Denbighshire. Sir Richard erected archery butts to entertain his male and female guests, one of whom recalled: 'when we returned home we were so delighted with the amusement that we immediately communicated with our neighbours and proposed the establishment of an Archery Society, to be confined to the families in the neighbourhood of Wrexham.'

Archery's role as a 'link in the chain of society' was furthered by the involvement of women. The Royal British Bowmen was the first archery society to admit females. The ladies were originally to be guests of the society but they indicated their desire to be full members and were granted their wish, with the society retaining its title having decided that 'bowmen' could be taken in a 'comprehensive' sense as applicable to both sexes. The women still had to go through the normal balloting system but were given voting rights and excused all costs except the fines for not wearing the uniform, possibly a reflection of the belief that women had no independent financial means of their own.

In common with the urban fashion for male clubs, other archery societies, particularly those that met in taverns, were not quite so progressive towards their female guests and relatives. Women's roles were limited to shooting at the invitation of their male counterparts or traditional symbolic positions such as the Lady Patroness who would present the winning archer with his prize.
